Global Overview

United States:

The US stock market ended the session in positive territory, maintaining the 3-day winning streak, as concerns over a trade dispute between the United States and China remained on the sidelines. On the other hand, optimism about first quarter earnings increased and JP Morgan chase and other financial institutions are expected to start the profit retest next week. In addition, earnings projections have dramatically increased since Congress passed sweeping changes in the tax law at the end of last year and first-quarter earnings growth is expected to be the highest in seven years. In business news, a Brazilian judge ordered Facebook to pay around 33 million dollars for not cooperating with a corruption investigation. In other news, the Pentagon issued a statement affirming that the United States Department has approved the possible sale of German Triton drones systems for an estimated cost of 2.5 billion dollars. Finally, the companies Amazon, JP Morgan and Berkshire Hathaway plan to launch an independent business that seeks to reduce the costs of health care for employees in the three companies, which generated a small blow in the industry.

Europe:

The European stock market ended today's session with positive results among its main indices. European stocks saw the biggest one-day spike in almost two years thanks to the relaxation of worries of a global trade war, as investors expect the world's two largest economies to step back from their tariff plans in, at least, the next six months. In view of this context, the Stoxx Europe 600 index increased +2.40%, being the most acute daily movement since the end of June 2016, this positive result put the index back in the spotlight, since said performance also represented the best weeks gain since on March 9. This situation of less tension allowed that the exporting companies of cars revert the losses of previous sessions. This is the case of the German Daimler AG, which rose +1.56%, as well as Volkswagen (+2.73%) or Fiat Chrysler Automobiles which rose by +4.85%. Similar result happened in the banking sector with Swedbank (+1.65%) and HSBC Holdings PLC (+1.75%). In economic news, retail sales in the eurozone grew 0.1% in February, which was lower than the forecast gain of 0.5%. In Germany, there is weak demand for industrial products, in the United Kingdom the activity of services was affected by low consumer demand.

Asia:

The Asian market ended the day with positive results. The Chinese market including Taiwan and Hong Kong remained closed for holidays, while the Japanese market and the Singapore market were the leaders of the region. In China, the conflicts over the trade war with the United States eased somewhat since this morning it was announced that officials from both countries are seeking talks. The United States is seeking an agreement before the implementation of China's decision to apply tariffs on US imports of soy, automobiles and aircraft, among other products, announced yesterday in response to tariffs that the US announced on the previous day to China. These events caused a rise in the dollar while the value of the future of gold decreased due to the decrease in concerns over the conflict, which helps to regain the confidence of investors. On the other hand, the Japanese NIKKEI index increased 1.53% driven mainly by the real estate (+2.62%) and health sectors (+2.43%), while the Chinese Hang Seng index closed the previous day with losses of -2.19% led by the Information Technology (-3.23%) and First Need Products (-2.92%) sectors.
