Global Overview:

United States:

The US markets closed mostly upwards, and in historical records for the S&P 500 index and the NASDAQ thanks to the performance of technological stocks on the day. The Texas Instruments Inc share stood at 7.4%, after the company reported that microchip demand will not remain weak for a long time, which boosted the entire semiconductor sector which led to the Philadelphia chip index rising 3.1% reaching historical highs. Similarly, the United Parcel Service Inc (UPS) share jumped 8.7% on the day because the company, highly sensitive to trade, reported quarterly profits better than expected by the market. Otherwise, the share of the giant of the heavy industry, Caterpillar Inc, fell 4.5% after it was known that the company had disappointing results in China and that in addition the production costs rose, in the same way, the share of Boeing Co fell 3.1% after the company announced its second quarter results, in which the company suffered the largest quarterly decline in its history due to the flight restrictions that weigh on the company's 737 MAX model.

Europe:

European markets closed slightly higher amid a new round of corporate profits and disappointing economic data from Germany and France. It is noted that Boris Johnson is officially the new British Prime Minister, where he must try to address the issue of Brexit and other more pressing in the country. In his first public words as PM pointed out: "... those who doubt, losers and pessimists, who did not believe that Britain could achieve a valuable Brexit, will soon prove to be wrong." In addition, he promised to invest in social services, surveillance and hospitals, as well as giving priority to strengthening among the constituent parts of the UK. On the other hand, the president of the European Central Bank (ECB), Mario Draghi, mentioned that the institution will make it necessary to counteract a fall in inflation expectations. Expectations are divided as to whether the ECB wants to anticipate an EDF policy movement, which pushes the dollar down and strengthens the euro, harming exporters in the region and would further affect inflation. However, traditional observers expect a change in the future orientation of the central bank at this month's meeting and then, a possible action on interest rates at its September meeting. In other news, PMI data - purchasing managers index - showed that the situation in the German manufacturing sector worsened in July, while French business growth unexpectedly slowed.

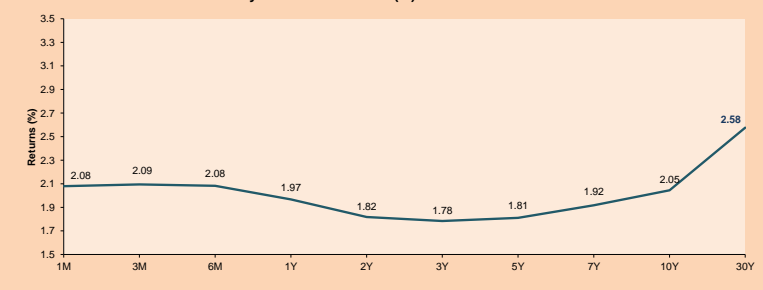

Asia:

The Asian market ended the day with positive returns, while investors expect the commercial business to develop between the United States and China. According to the Chinese indexes, both the Shanghai Composite (+ 0.80%) and the Shenzhen Composite (+ 0.99%) closed with bullish shares, as well as the Hong Kong index, the Hang Seng (+ 0.20%). Among the most active shares of the day, L'Occitane (+ 5.48%) registered a great advance in the price of its shares after Nomura, a financial entity that analyzes the Asian portfolio, improved the status of the "buy" share. On the other hand, in Japan, the Nikkei 225 (+ 0.41%) also ended up in positive territory despite the fall of the stock of LG Display (3.81%), Apple's supplier, after reporting an operating loss greater than estimated during the second quarter of the year. Additionally, the company announced that it will expect to diversify its operations center, amid the disputes between Tokyo and Seoul over the fact that the Japanese government has placed curbs in its exports to South Korea. Finally, China's defense minister said that the Taiwan conflict would be resolved in the next few days, where the authority asked the US defense department to cancel its sale of $ 2.2 billion in the form of weapons to Taiwan.
