Global Overview:

United States:

The stock market ended the day with mixed results, pending the decision of the Federal reserve this week. In addition, Tuesday's inflation figures in the United States, which were in line with the estimates, could reignite the debate on the four hikes in 2018 before the Fed decision. On the other hand, with the volume operating below the average of 30 days, the S & P 500 index touched session lows in afternoon trading. Shelter assets, including the yen and gold, fell after President Donald Trump and Kim Jong Un signed a document promising to work for peace on the Korean peninsula. On the other hand, the dollar index rose 0.21%, stabilized in part by data on Tuesday that show that US consumer prices rose in May amid a slowdown in rising gasoline costs. Finally, western Texas oil fluctuated after Iraq joined the other OPEC members to resist a push to increase oil supplies.

Europe:

The European market closed the day with mixed results among its main indices. While France and the United Kingdom had divided results, Spain, Italy and Germany had gains. One of the stocks with the best returns was the French retail chain, Casino Guichard Perrat, after announcing that they are close to the sale of assets for 1.5 billion euros. The news has a great impact on the company since its price is currently 32% lower than last year due to investor concerns about its debt management. Another business news was the rise of the German power company E.ON after announcing its first solar project in Texas, United States. The stock closed with +2.08%, leading the Euro Stoxx50. In other news, the UK labor force continued to rise during the first quarter of the year, reaching 32.4 million workers. The unemployment rate remained constant at 4.2%, while the growth of wages reached 2.8%, slightly below expectations. On the other hand, the pound had a volatile day due to the meetings in the United Kingdom to fix the amendments that will finally separate the country from the European Union, but, for example, allow them to remain within their customs union.

Asia:

The Asian stock market closed the session with slightly positive results among its main indices. Most markets remained calm after US President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un met for the first time in Singapore today, the leaders signed an agreement to work together on the complete denuclearization of the Korean peninsula, although it had some criticism from Americans due to the pact did not use the words irreversible and verifiable. However, this event did not have much impact on the regional markets of Asia, this is how Korea, Japan, Hong Kong and Singapore showed little variation, while the Japanese yen fell against the dollar in the session. According to Toru Ibayashi, head of equities at UBS Wealth Management, Japanese investors have been expecting a drop in their currency to buy shares especially in this time that Japanese stocks are more affordable after a quarter of sales. The index that showed the best performance was the Hong Kong HSI, which rose +0.13%; on the other hand, in South Korea the SEU index fell -0.05%, dragged down by the negative return of -1.00% of Samsung Electronics Co.
