Global Overview:

United States:

The US market closes with negative yields, continuing last week's decline after facing a week full of socio-political conflicts with China for not complying with the agreements on Taiwan. The DOW JONES index closed in negative territory on expectations of increased risk in the FED inflation report. Investors have pulled back their investments in anticipation of the consumer price index, which has been projected to decline. However, concerns about a rise in inflation are still present. The S&P500 index ended with a negative performance, with concerns that high inflation followed by last week's strong jobs numbers will prompt the Fed to continue aggressive interest rate hikes. Five of eleven sectors have fallen, with Technology and Communication Services being the hardest hit sectors. In addition, U.S. president, Joe Biden, signed a bill delivering $52.7 billion in subsidies to encourage semiconductor production and boost efforts to make the U.S. more competitive with China in technology and science traits. Finally, the NASDAQ index closed with negative performance after Micron Technology Inc, reported risks of collapsing demand for chip production in the future and projected negative free cash flows. All 30 companies in the Philadelphia Semiconductor index fell. Thus, DOW JONES -0.18%; S&P 500 -0.42%; NASDAQ -1.19%, ended the day with negative results.

Europe:

The main European indices ended the session with negative returns following the release of the US inflation report. Investors took more cautious steps in anticipation of the Fed's next move on interest rate hikes. The pan-European STOXX 600 index closed lower, due to pessimistic speculation regarding rising geopolitical tensions and interest rate hike fears. On the equity side, the technology sector led the decline by -3.10%. Regarding the English market, reflected in the FTSE 100, it closed the session down. This was due to forecasts regarding the rise in the price of energy, which caused a conservative effect on the part of investors. For its part, the DAX index ended lower, due to concerns about high inflation, slow economic growth and the tightening of monetary policy. On the corporate side, IWG plunged more than 11% to lead declines in the STOXX 600 index after failing to meet investor expectations. The French market ended the session in positive territory, but down 0.5% compared to Monday. In a context, in which oil prices increased after Russia stopped oil flows to Hungary, Slovakia and the Czech Republic. Thus, FTSE 100 +0.08%; CAC 40 -0.53%; DAX -1.12%; STOXX 600 -0.67% ended at mostly negative levels.

Asia:

The main Asian indices closed with mixed performances. The Chinese market closed with upward returns, in a context in which the index gained on the good performance of energy and renewable energy-related stocks, as well as gains in the semiconductor sector. This developed in a context in which legislation was introduced in the United States to combat climate change by increasing the budget to create or expand tax credits to benefit the creation of clean energy, energy efficiency and a broader market for electric vehicles. Despite this, gains were limited by increased tensions between China and Taiwan in the wake of Nancy Pelosi's visit. In contrast to mainland China, the HANG SENG index closed in negative territory, due to the tense situation, the resurgence of COVID 19 cases in China and the weak performance of the industrial sector and private consumption-related stocks. The Japanese market closed negative due to negative quarterly results from SoftBank Group and Tokyo Electron, amid increased restrictions on technology exports to the United States. The South Korean market ended the session in slightly positive territory, mainly impacted by legislation in the United States that boosted battery manufacturers and by a strengthening of the won. The Australian market rose slightly but remained almost flat after the U.S. legislation. Thus, NIKKEI -0.88%; HANG SENG -0.21%; CSI 300 +0.20%; SHANGHAI COMP. +0.32%; S&P/ASX 200 +0.13%; KOSPI +0.42% ended with mixed performances.
