Global Overview

United States:

The US stock market ended the day with mixed results due to a possible missile test by North Korea and the arrival of Hurricane Irma on the Florida coast over the weekend. In more detail, the storm system has wreaked havoc on a number of Caribbean islands, leaving at least 13 dead and buildings on two small islands - Barbuda and San Martin almost completely destroyed. In other news, stock indexes rose briefly after the House passed a bill that extends the US debt limit and government funding until December 8, already approved by the Senate, just missing the signature of President Donald Trump. In business news, telecoms company Verizon Communications Inc. fell -0.14%, setting them on track for the ninth consecutive drop. This would be the longest streak of losses since the nine-session stretch that ended Oct. 13, 2005. US yields also fell, with 10-year bond yields approaching more than 2 percent. Finally, the price of oil fell -3.06% to a price of 47.58 dollars a barrel, after the safety of recovering production, but not demand.

Europe:

The European stock market closed the day with mixed results among its main indices. The European benchmark Stoxx Europe 600 made gains for today. However, mining stocks fell after Chinese export growth slowed in August at a rate of 5.5 percent, sparking concerns about the softening global demand. The mining shares they lost were: copper producer Antofagasta and BHP Billiton PLC. On the other hand, French industrial production rose by 0.5% less than expected in July due to the contraction of agricultural and oil production, said the statistical agency Insee. Meanwhile, imports from Germany rose in July, a sign that domestic demand continues to boost the recovery of Europe's largest economy. Total imports of goods rose 2.2% over June. On the other hand, manufacturing in the United Kingdom recovered in July, according to official figures, but overall industrial output did not meet analysts' expectations rising by only 0.2%, suggesting that the economy recovered only moderately upon entering the third trimester. This caused the English benchmark FTSE 100 to lose ground for today, which would be the first weekly decline. Regarding currencies, the euro jumped above $ 1.20 in New York. This is detrimental to European exporters, as it could affect the prospects of income and profits for them. In addition, the pound continues to strengthen against the dollar, has risen about 2% this week.

Asia:

The Asian stock market ended today's session with mixed results among its main indices, as risk appetite declined on concerns about a massive storm approaching the United States. In addition, investors paid attention to the direction of monetary policy of North Korea and the rest of the world. Thus, according to some analysts, investors are opting for short positions (in other words, a selling position) before the weekend. Then, as the Central Bank of Europe deferred for at least a month the publication of a timetable on the gradual elimination of its efforts to buy bonds, speculation increased that this bank could maintain its support (through liquidity) for the current slow inflation. This caused the yen and bond prices to rise. The exchange rate rose from 108.35 yen per dollar to 108.05 yen per dollar, while the yield of the 10-year Treasury bond decreased close to 2% because of its inverse relationship with the price. This affected both exporters and insurers, causing Japan's Nikkei Stock Average benchmark index to fall by 0.3%. On the other hand, among the commodities, gold fell a bit after being at high levels yesterday. The price of the oil almost didn't change, after neutral overnight movements.
