Global Overview

United States:

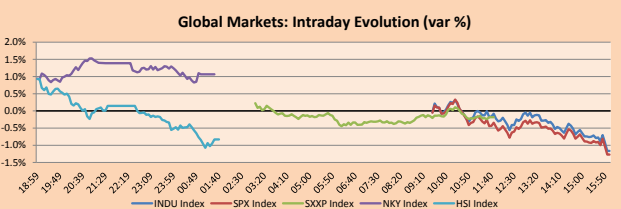

The US stock market ended the day with negative results, consumer discretionary and real estate stocks led the losses, with a drop of more than 2%, while telecommunications and public services, the sectors most sensitive to interest rates, fell 1.8% and 1.7% respectively. This occurred after Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell highlighted the strengthening of the economy during his testimony in Congress, which increases the likelihood that this improvement will be more aggressive to adjust monetary policy. In economic data, orders for durable goods plummeted 3.7% in January, the biggest drop since last summer, largely due to a sharp drop in passenger aircraft contracts that was expected. Potentially more worrisome, a key measure of business investment fell for the second month in a row, the first time since the beginning of 2016. Precisely, commercial aircraft orders fell by 28% last month after a 16% increase in December, a change that is common in the industry at the end of the year.

Europe:

The European stock market ended the day today with negative results among its main indices. These movements follow the retreat of US stocks after an optimistic assessment of the US economy by Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell raised concerns that the central bank will increase the rate of increases in its borrowing rates. In addition, these comments caused that the yield of the bonds of the American treasury to 10 years increased in +1.18%, approaching the mark of 3%. In business news, the shares of Sky PLC, a pan-European media services company, rose by +20.50% during today's session after Comcast, a United States-based media corporation, made an offer purchase for 22.1 billion pounds. This offer represents a 16% premium on the purchase offer of 21st Century Fox Inc. by the Walt Disney Company. In macroeconomic news, a preliminary reading of inflation in Spain for February reached 1.1%. This would be above the 0.8% estimated by FactSet and above the 0.6% obtained in the January reading.

Asia:

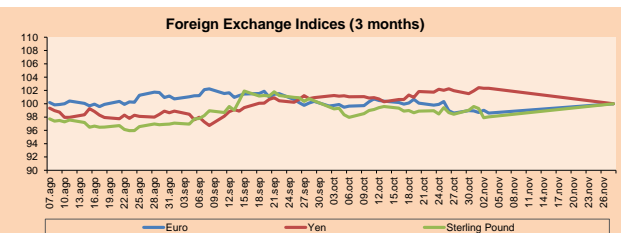

The Asian stock market ended today's session with positive results among its main indices. This was basically because the changes in the US tax code came to an end. This benefited the Australian market, whose S&P/ASX 200 index increased by 0.6%, reaching record levels in 10 years. This benefit was also explained, despite small movements in oil prices, due to the 1% increase in shares of companies related to mining and oil. In Japan, the Nikkei 225 stock index increased by 0.04%. This may be due to the fact that the Bank of Japan will start a two-day meeting on Wednesday, so there is an optimistic expectation on the issues that are going to be addressed. Regarding South Korea, the Kospi benchmark fell 0.2%, despite the 1.1% increase in the South Korean technology giant Samsung Electronics Co. On the other hand, in the other markets of the region, in Hong Kong, the Hang Seng index returned to positive territory in the month of December and increased 0.7%. Additionally, similar gains were recorded in the shares of mainland China and the New Zealand index closed with another record high.
