Global Overview:

United States:

The US stock market ended the day with positive results. The S & P 500 advanced for the fourth consecutive day after falling earlier in negative territory, driven by gains in financial companies and health services firms. In other news, the dollar remained low after the United States trade deficit fell to the lowest level since September thanks to record exports, amid administration tariffs and trade threats that risk damaging global trade. In greater detail, tariffs on imported steel and aluminum have shown signs of pushing up prices while upsetting some companies, although they have not influenced overall economic growth. In addition, most metals rebounded and yields on 10-year Treasury bonds rose above 2.95% after China offered to buy more US products and in reports the Treasury Department favors less radical investment limits in the US. Asian nation. For its part, oil exports, adjusted for inflation, rose to a record amidst the growing production of the United States.

Europe:

The European market ended the session with slightly positive results among its main indices. While in the region the Euro Stoxx ended positive with +0.19% and in the United Kingdom the FTSE100 closed at +0.33%, in France there were mixed results and the CAC 40 closed at -0.06%. The day was driven by the rise in the price of Commodities, where the underlying prices of oil and copper rose; while there was also a boost in technology stocks, which remained close to the historical maximum of the last 17 years after the previous session reached a record close on the American NASDAQ. However, Italy's political noise hurt yields due to concerns over the spending plans of the new coalition government. On the other hand, rumors increased that the European Central Bank would plan the cessation of the program of massive purchases of bonds (quantitative easing) at its meeting next week, and among its main effects was the rise in the euro that reached $ 1.1370, the highest value since the last 2 weeks. In other news, Germany's Federal Motor Transport Authority asked Volkswagen to recall 60,000 diesel-powered Audi vehicles worldwide after finding an illicit device that modifies the readings of nitrogen dioxide emissions.

Asia:

The Asian stock market closed the session with moderate gains among its main indices, driven by the rebound in Japanese market shares. The Nik index rose +0.38% at the end of the session being its fourth consecutive closing with gains in the last 5 days. This could be due to a Yen increasingly depreciated against the dollar, which ends up favoring exporters like Toyota that closed the session with +1.76%, Sony with +2.78% or Hitachi with +3.12%. In China the SHCOMP index rose modestly +0.03%, managing to recover from a start with negative returns caused by the fall in companies in the energy and financial sector. Meanwhile the China's Shenzhen index rose +0.08% after Facebook confirmed that it had reached data associations with several Chinese electronic firms such as Huawei. On the other hand, BHP Billiton (+1.99%) and Rio Tinto (+2.51%) boosted the Australian market, this is how the XJO closed at +0.50%. On the other hand, the Singapore market had a downward performance, the STI index fell -0.44%. In macroeconomic news, highlights the growth of the Australian economy driven by an increase in its exports government spending on infrastructure. Its GDP grew +1.0% in the first quarter of the year according to the Australian Bureau of Statistics.
