Global Overview:

United States:

The US stock market finished today with mixed results among its main indices. The S&P500 index rose by +0.19%, with nine of its eleven primary sectors positive during the session and with the energy sector growing the most by closing at +2.9%. The movements of the energy sector were due to the fact that the price of crude oil rose sharply today, after OPEC announced that they agreed to increase oil production in an amount lower than that anticipated by investors. On the other hand, the Dow Jones Industrial Average benchmark index closed at +0.49%, thus breaking its 8-day losing streak. However, it came to mark its largest weekly decline since March 23 and its second consecutive weekly drop. In business news, shares of BlackBerry Ltd. fell to -8.72% after they reported their earnings for the first quarter, which did not reach the forecasts of analysts, despite having exceeded expectations. In economic news, June data on the manufacturing sector fell from 56.4 to 54.6, while those in the service sector retreated to 56.5 from 56.8.

Europe:

The European market ended the day with positive results among its main indices, ending the run of negative returns of the week. After the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in Vienna, it was agreed to increase oil production, however, this increase was lower than the figures feared by investors, so the price of oil was on the rise. Brent crude, the benchmark for the European market, reached $74.80 per barrel for August at the close of the day. This boosted the shares of the energy sector, which had repercussions both the Euro Stoxx 600 regional index (+1.09%), in the FTSE100 (+1.67%) in the United Kingdom, and the CAC40 (+1.34%) in Paris, which finished upwards. In other news, the finance ministers of the Eurozone agreed to extend the deadline to Greece to pay part of their debt for another 10 years, as well as grant an additional 15 billion euros to pay off their most expensive debts and to meet their financing needs in the short term. However, many consider that these measures are not enough to put an end to the doubts of the solvency of Greece in the long term. Finally, the commercial activity of the Eurozone rebounded in June, a sign that the economy of the region could be improving after a slow start this year.

Asia:

The Asian market started having losses led by the eighth decline of the Dow Jones Industrial Index, however, at the end of the day it managed to recover closing with mixed results. The Japanese market closed in negative region, the NIK index fell -0.78% driven by the losses of the automotive sector, for example, Toyota and Honda fell -2.66% and -1.97% respectively. Meanwhile, the Korean SEU index closed at +0.83%, pushed by the earnings of Samsung Electronics shares (+0.43%). On the other hand, Hong Kong stocks recovered at the close of the day, so the HSI index ended at +0.15% driven by the price of Tencent shares that rose +0.15% after recent losses. While the Taiwanese TAIEX index closed at -0.38% after two days of gains. On the other hand, investors continue to show certain concerns that trade tension between the United States and its major trading partners such as China and the European Union will continue to drag global markets. In other news, OPEC agrees to a modest increase in oil supply for the following month after Saudi Arabia, leader of the cartel, persuaded Iran to cooperate in the agreement.
