Global Overview:

United States:

The US stock market closed the session with negative results among its main indices. The main indices such as the SPX, the DJIA and the Nasdaq Comp fell -0.71%, -0.77% and -0.67% respectively. Of the first index in mention, only the energy sector showed positive returns of +0.51%, while the rest of sectors remained on the downside, being the most affected the basic materials (-1.38%) and financial (-1.15%). The Turkish crisis generated a stir among investors dragging the performance of the US financial sector as it is feared that its effects spread to other economies around the world. In addition, the proposal to double tariffs on steel and aluminum imported from Turkey could further increase costs for domestic projects of US pipelines, as this could force them to turn to other steelmakers, raising their costs given the higher price of the metal. In business news, the number of shares sold short of Tesla Inc. has recovered and is now higher than before Elon Musk, CEO of the company, proposed on Tuesday to privatize the electric car manufacturer. Between Monday and Thursday, the number of shares sold short has gone from 34.67 to 34.75 million, so Tesla has become the shortest stock in the US.

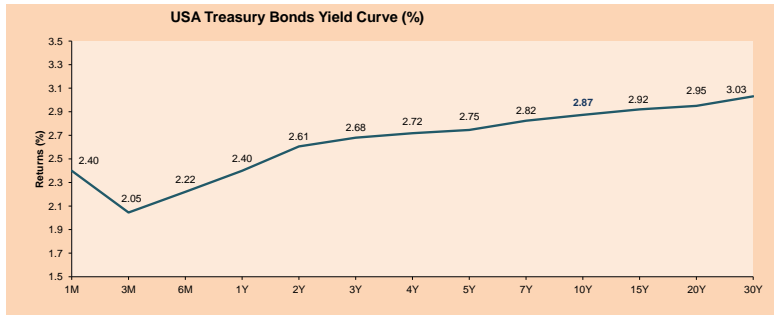

Europe:

The European stock market ended the day today with negative results among its main indices. The pound sterling reached its lowest level in a year to close at 1.2758 dollars per unit, the loss of value of the currency, was accentuated by the preparations for the fragmentation of banking operations that would cause a post-Brexit scenario while the euro depreciated Friday against the dollar, being one of the worst-performing currencies of the G-10 on the day. The Euro Stoxx 50 index closed the session at -1.94% and highlighted the German benchmark DAX, which closed at its lowest level in a month after a drop of -1.99% driven by the decline of Deutsche Bank (-4.06, %) belonging to the Financial sector (-1.98%) after investors sold their shares due to the concern of over-exposure of European banks to the Turkish lira. The company ThyssenKrupp (-2.99%) of the Materials segment (-2.39%) had the worst performance among the sectors that make up the DAX.

Asia:

The Asian market finished the day with negative returns amid fears about whether financial instability in Turkey would spread to other markets. The Nikkei closed at -1.33%, being approximately the loss of 1% in the whole week; however, Japan returned to solid growth in the second quarter of the year (+1.9%), after a contraction (-0.9%) in the first quarter, so the trend will continue to be supported by higher wages and consumer spending unless commercial conflicts get worse. The Hang Seng ended down with -0.84% after four consecutive days of earnings underprivileged by the Technology sector, with the Tencent company which fell 0.7%. The Kospi index closed downward with -0.91% hit by the weakness of the company Samsung (-3.20%) that lost more than 3% after presenting its new device Galaxy Note 9 will not win much reception by the public. Among the most relevant news, the Turkish lira has depreciated 13.3% this week against the dollar, reaching a new historical low after the European Central Bank expressed its concerns about a potential contagion of Turkish banking problems, especially to inflation and its dependence on external financing.
