Global Overview:

United States:

The US market closed the session with positive returns among its main indexes amid greater trade tensions after Donald Trump refused to rule out the increase in tariffs on Chinese imports for next year. The S&P 500 ended the day at +0.33%, favored by the Basic Consumer Products and Public Services sectors; the Dow Jones increased by +0.44% while the Nasdaq Composite increased by +0.01%. Among the main news, Donald Trump told the Wall Street Journal, that it is highly unlikely that he will accept China's request to delay the increase in tariffs on Chinese products since January 2019, so, if no agreement is reached, will implement the additional $267 million at a tariff rate of 10% or 25%. On the other hand, the vice president of the FED, Richard Clarida, mentioned that they are closely monitoring the indicators of inflation expectations, this being contained despite the labor markets restricted by productivity growth. On the other hand, he pointed out that the equilibrium inflation rate was below the central bank's target, which is 2%. Regarding commodities, the price of gold (-0.66%) fell for the third consecutive session, trading at $1216.50 per ounce, with a strengthening of the dollar as a result of the weakness of the euro and the pound.

Europe:

The European market closed with negative results among its main indexes after the US government threatened to impose new tariffs on products of Chinese origin. It is feared that the Sino-US trade dispute could escalate and spread to Europe after Wirtschaftswoche magazine reported the possibility of new taxes on imported cars, this would have a significant impact on the German and French auto industry, affecting companies like Volkswagen AG (-2.56%), Renault SA (+0.82%), Peugeot SA (+0.23%) and Bayerische Motoren Werke AG (-1.40%). The Stoxx Europe 600, which groups shares of companies from 17 countries in the European region, fell 0.26% while the British benchmark index FTSE100 fell by 0.27%. The sectors with the worst performance in the British index were Materials (-1.60%) and Health (-0.64%) while the stocks with the worst performance were Johnson Matthey PLC (-4.13%) and GVC Holdings PLC (-3.77%). For its part, the German benchmark fell by 0.40% in a session in which 14 stocks that compose it ended up while 15 ended on the downside.

Asia:

The Asian market cooled compared to the previous session as investors remain on the lookout for a weekend meeting about trade issues between the US President Donald Trump and the Chinese President Xi Jinping. In this way, the Asian market closed the session with mixed results among its main indices. For example, the Japanese Nikkei index (+0.64%) closed higher, boosted by the performance of companies such as Panasonic (+2.74%) and Renesas Electronics (+2.22%). This better performance was thanks to the start of the holiday shopping season in the United States. On the other hand, domestic demand companies were affected amid a fear of lower global demand. The pharmaceutical and public services sector in Japan were affected by an appreciation of the dollar, which went from ¥113.21 to ¥113.46 on the last Monday in New York. The Hong Kong index, Hang Seng, closed downwards at -0.17%, mainly driven by the lower performance of the energy sector (-1.00%) and the product of basic needs (-1.77%), while the technology sector it remained modestly in a positive region, highlighting Tencent company (+1.95%).
