Global Overview:

United States:

The American market closed the day with its main indexes falling, due to the caution of investors before the first quarter earnings season starting on Friday with the reports of two of the largest banks in the country: JP Morgan Chase & Co. (+0.84%) and Wells Fargo & Co. (-0.10%) which could provide clues to the health of the US economy and its banking sector. Around this, and with investors struggling to identify catalysts to boost the market before the unofficial start of the corporate earnings season, the S&P 500 ended the transfer unchanged after growing anxiety about the global economic slowdown will overshadow the data optimism. However, despite concerns about the future path of economic growth, the state of the US labor market remains strong, as evidenced by a recently published report, in which new applications for unemployment benefits reach a minimum of 50 years. In corporate news, shares of International Business Machines Inc. rose 0.5% after Credit Suisse analyst Matthew Cabral began coverage of the company with a target price of $ 173 and a higher performance rating.

Europe:

The European market closed up, except for the FTSE 100 (-0.05%) that showed losses. The leaders of the European Union (EU) have agreed an extended term until October for Brexit, being longer than Theresa May wants, which would provoke a violent reaction from the opposition party, the Labor Party. For this reason, the director of the IMF, Christine Lagarde, mentioned that the delay of six months that the exit of the UK avoids the terrible result of a Brexit without agreement, that would press even more the global economic deceleration; He also added that the agreement would not solve the problems between both parties. On the other hand, the EU countries gave their initial authorization to initiate formal trade talks with the United States. Thus, the European Commission has requested the approval of two negotiating mandates: one to reduce tariffs on industrial products, and the other to make it easier for companies to demonstrate that products comply with EU or US standards. In other news, the German government is expected to have its forecast of economic growth by 2019 to 0.5% on Wednesday, due to weaker exports and imports as a result of global trade tensions.

Asia:

The Asian markets finished the day with mixed results, in a context yet to be determined if the "flexible extension" of Brexit until the end of October by the European Union is favorable for investors. On the other hand, in the main indexes of China and Hong Kong, both the Shanghai Composite (-1.60%) and Hang Seng (-0.93%) ended up in the red zone, unlike the Japanese Nikkei 225 (+0.11%), which it had a slight increase during the date. Shares in China were mainly driven by the inflation data report, whose level peaked in the price of food compared to the last 5 months. As for the long-awaited commercial treaty between the two largest powers in the world, to the relief of many investors, US Treasury Secretary, Steven Mnuchin, informed the CNBC portal that both Washington and Beijing have agreed on a mechanism to reciprocal support if the agreement is reached. Then, while China is cooling the trade war, Japan is preparing for its clash with Trump, since for more than two years it had managed to avoid bilateral negotiations with the US President. The prime minister, Shinzo Abe, is desperate to avoid tariffs or quotas, mainly in the lucrative exports of automobiles.
