Global Overview:

United States:

The U.S. market closed with negative performances during a context marked by the release of discouraging data for investors, which fueled fears of an aggressive fight by the Federal Reserve against inflation. The DOW JONES index closed in negative territory after the Conference Board's consumer confidence index fell to the lowest level since February 2021 and short-term expectations are the most pessimistic in nearly a decade. The S&P500 index also ended with a significantly negative performance, as nervousness returned after the Fed chairmen in San Francisco and New York came out in favor of aggressive fund rate hikes to combat inflation, where Nike(-7%), fell after its first quarter revenue guidance missed estimates due to expectations of further discounting and pandemic-related disruptions in China. Finally, the NASDAQ index turned negative, pressured by rising Treasury yields which remained above 3.2%, 14 basis points higher than the 2-week low. Thus, DOW JONES -1.56%; S&P 500 -2.01%; NASDAQ -2.98% ended the day with negative results.

Europe:

Major European indices ended the session with negative returns. The pan-European STOXX 600 index ended with losses against a backdrop where energy stocks were a rare green spot as investor concerns over aggressive central bank tightening took hold in European equities on Tuesday. The U.K. market, reflected in the FTSE 100, fell this session amid concerns that the Bank of England is still taking precautions that it will raise interest rates. Likewise, the pound sterling faces political risks such as the uncertainty of the fate of an EU agreement with the north of Ireland. The DAX index closed in negative territory in a context where gas prices in Europe rose up to 21%, as the reduction of Russian flows added to a longer than expected outage of a liquefied natural gas terminal in the United States, which has been key for this year's supply. The French market fell this session, where the country's market may be dodging recessions for the current half of 2022 and there may be early signs of inflationary pressure as some companies increase prices, according to the central bank. Thus, FTSE 100 -0.25%; CAC 40 -1.20%; DAX -0.91%; STOXX 600 -1.26% ended at negative levels.

Asia:

Major Asian indices closed with mixed performances. The Chinese market closed higher, against a backdrop of improved investor sentiment on speculation of further Chinese government easing of regulations on private companies. Specifically, regulations are expected to be less stringent and these are expected to reduce the uncertainty of equities, allowing them to maximize their value in the market. Despite this, inflation in the United States and the rise in COVID cases has impacted Fitch Ratings' projections for the country's economic growth, affecting today's equity returns. In line with mainland China, the HANG SENG index closed flat despite the overnight dynamics of US stocks affected by fears of further monetary tightening. The Japanese market closed significantly negative as regional investors remain concerned about more hawkish Fed policies ahead of tomorrow's meeting that could lead to a recession. The South Korean market ended the session in slightly negative territory, following the dynamics of the other Asian countries concerned about the Fed meeting, in a context in which the won weakened against the dollar to a level not seen since March 2020. The Australian market was the hardest hit, due to concerns about a global recession and also the RBA's recent monetary tightening. Thus, NIKKEI -1.33%; HANG SENG was unchanged; CSI 300 +0.79%; SHANGHAI COMP. +1.02%; S&P/ASX 200 -3.55%; KOSPI -0.46% ended with mixed performances.
