Global Overview

United States:

The US stock market ended the session with positive results, in contrast the Dow climbed to its ninth record closing high, while the S & P 500 ended up slightly higher on Monday, with gains from the consumer and technology sector offsetting losses in Energy. However, trading volume was relatively light, as investors had little reason to make big bets with the US Congress and President Donald Trump on vacation and a stronger-than-expected earnings season coming to an end. On the other hand, the increase in stocks occurred when government bonds fell to a minimum, with the 10-year reference bond yielding 2.26%, bond prices moved inversely to yields, in that sense lower bond yields may make the possessor shares, perceived as riskier, more attractive to investors. Finally, the energy sector led losses with a fall of 0.9% as oil prices fell with a rebound in output from Libya's largest oil field, along with concerns over increased OPEC and United states.

Europe:

The European stock market closed the day with mixed results among its main indices. The European reference index Stoxx 600 and the German DAX 30 index ended in red territory for today. On the one hand, industrial production of the largest economic power in Europe fell at the end of the second quarter surprisingly according to data published by the German Ministry of Economy, Production fell by 1.1% in June from the previous month, which would be the first drop since last December. However, the Ministry explained the production increased 1.8% in this quarter compared to the previous quarter. On the other hand, Paddy Power Betfair fell about -5% representing one of the biggest drops of the Stoxx 600, the reason being that the online betting company announced that its current CEO Breon Corcoran will resign after 16 years and The company named Peter Jackson as its successor. Another big drop was PostNL, which fell about -5% current after it announced quarterly earnings were half the expected range. On the other hand, mining stocks were among the most winning for today thanks to a rise in iron prices. The company ArcelorMittal represented the highest gain for today with + 4% approximately. This is because futures for iron and other basic metals rose in Asia due to speculation that the Chinese government will order some production plants to close lowering its mineral production.

Asia:

The Asian stock market ended today's session with mixed results among its main indexes, most of which were positive. This was because the US employment report, released last Friday, showed optimistic results, helping investors' sentiment (and hence demand for goods from Asia) to rise. In addition, the report helped the US dollar to increase, as did bond yields. As a result, Asian currencies like the yen depreciated, making the exporters' goods less expensive, more attractive to importers, and to have a competitive advantage at an international level. This caused the benchmark Nikkei Stock Average to grow at 0.6%, also helped by financial stocks. Referring to Australia, as commodity prices increased, companies like BHP Billiton and Rio Tinto increased by 2% each, generating a 0.9% increase in the S&P/ASX 200 benchmark index. On the other hand, in Korea, the Kospi benchmark index rose 0.4%, continuing its recovery after massive sales last week, triggered by a possible tax hike. In addition, the United Nations Security Council passed a unanimous resolution that could reduce North Korea's annual export earnings by one-third (approximately 1 billion dollars).
