Global Overview

United States:

The US stock market ended the session with negative results, after failing to defend intraday earnings on Wednesday, as investors struggled to adapt to an investment environment marked by rising bond yields and inflation signals. The move to the south of the market coincided with an increase in the Treasury yield to 10 years after the news of a two-year budget agreement announced by the main senators that would significantly increase fiscal spending. In more detail, the leaders of Congress reached an agreement on a two-year budget pact that would increase fiscal spending by $ 300 billion due to a large increase in military spending, the agreement, which must still be approved by Congress. At least it is likely to end the fear of another government closure. Finally, oil prices fell for the fourth consecutive session on Wednesday, after government data showed that US crude and fuel reserves rose last week, while US drillers continue to increase production.

Europe:

The European stock market finished the day with positive results among its main indices, thus breaking the streak of seven consecutive sessions of losses. These movements followed the progress made by the main US indices on Tuesday, when it recovered part of the losses it had in the session on Monday. For its part, the shares of the UK benchmark index, the FTSE 100, rose 1.9% after having finished at its lowest level since April 2017 in the previous session. It was also boosted by the decline in the pound sterling from 1.3878 dollars to 1.3950, which improves the profits of British exporters when converting their dollars to pounds. In Eurozone news, the European Union raised its forecasts for the growth of the same. It is expected that 19 members of the Eurozone will have a 2.3% GDP growth for this year. These prospects are due to an expectation of global acceleration and strengthening of trade. Pierre Moscovici, European commissioner for economic and financial affairs, said that "investment is rising magnificently" so that there are good expectations for this part of the world. Regarding unemployment, they expect to end 2018 with a rate of 8.5% and on the side of inflation is expected to rise 1.5% in this year.

Asia:

The Asian stock market closed the day with negative results among its main indices, with the exception of the Japanese benchmark index "Nikkei 225". The Hong Kong index, "Hang Seng", ended with a decline of -0.9%, as did the composite index of Shanghai which lost -1.8%. However, Asia is still expected to "see strong growth amid global monetary conditions that are still quite lax," said Virgil Fernandez Esguerra, a macro independent analyst. Some analysts say that concerns about Chinese equities persist despite the more optimistic outlook for actions at the regional level. On the other hand, the South Korean reference index "Kospi" ended the day with losses of -2.3% approximately, due to a big drop in the technological giant "Samsung Electronics" which fell close to -3.4%. On the other hand, China's foreign exchange reserves rose to a 16-month high in January. The reserves increased from $ 21.5 billion to $ 3.161 billion for the past month according to data from the People's Bank of China shown today. Economists polled by The Wall Street Journal expected an increase of $ 30 billion. Pan Gongsheng, head of China's currency regulator, said in a statement that the macroprudential administration of cross-border capital flows "has returned to a neutral nature." "The level of reserves will remain stable to a large extent as bidirectional fluctuations in the yuan's exchange rate become more prominent," the State Administration of Foreign Exchange said.
