Global Overview:

United States:

The US stock market ended the day with negative results, after President Donald Trump canceled a summit with Kim Jong Un of North Korea and threatened to impose tariffs on car imports. In more detail, Trump canceled the June 12 meeting citing Pyongyang's "open hostility," even after North Korea fulfilled a promise to blow up tunnels at its nuclear test site. The market, which was already lower due to a drop in oil prices and worries about Trump ordering a national security investigation into imports of cars and trucks, fell sharply after the meeting was suspended. On the other hand, the crude price of the United States fell by 3%, with expectations that OPEC could close a production agreement due to concerns about supplies from Venezuela and Iran. In business news, Best Buy fell 7.5% after the consumer electronics retailer reported a slowdown in quarterly online sales and did not update its outlook for the full year.

Europe:

The European stock market ended the day today with negative results among its main indices. The stocks in general were affected by the cancellation by the president of the United States, Donald Trump, of what would have been a historic meeting with the leader of North Korea, Kim Jong Un. On the other hand, President Trump raised concerns about a trade war by announcing an investigation that could lead his country to impose tariffs on car imports. This affected the actions of the European companies that produce these vehicles. On the other hand, the actions of the Italian market were between gains and losses after the president of Italy, Sergio Mattarella, gave Giuseppe Conte, who was proposed as prime minister by the coalition of 5 Star Movement and League, a formal mandate to form a government, which would potentially end 11 months of political stalemate. Both sides have promised to challenge the budgetary and immigration guidelines of Brussels. As well as increasing fiscal spending and reducing taxes, which leads to concerns that the Italian economy could disorganize and a new sovereign debt crisis could be created.

Asia:

The Asian market closed today with mixed results among its main indices. While in Japan, China and South Korea the indexes had markedly downward results, in Hong Kong and Taiwan they ended with positive results. At the close of the Asian market, Donald Trump's decision to cancel his meeting with the North Korean president was still unknown, so the market's answer is expected tomorrow, however, the market had already been uncertain about whether the long-awaited meeting would come to fruition, which drove the fall of the Nikkei 225 to -1.11%. In addition, Japanese automakers led the losses, including Mazda Motor (-5.22%), Mitsubishi Motor (-3.83%) and Honda Motor (-3.39%), while in South Korea Hyundai Motor (-3.11%) and Kia Motor (-2.82%) fell, product of the announcement of the United States of increasing the tariffs for the import of vehicles up to 25%. On the other hand, the Hang Seng remained on the upside closing at +0.31% driven by the Energy sector (+1.18%). In other news, Taiwan's economy seems to slow down after closing last year with the highest growth of the last 3 years. Growth remains, only that at lower rates due to the weakening of the Taiwanese dollar and the rise in oil prices that is increasing inflation.
