Global Overview:

United States:

The US stock market finished today with mixed results among its main indices. Overall, the shares were mostly positive, following the European Central Bank's announcement on its plans to finalize its bond purchase program by the end of this year and the promise to keep interest rates at current levels up to at least next summer. On the other hand, tensions over a trade war continue in the wake of the administration of President Donald Trump is preparing to announce tariffs for 10 billion dollars of Chinese products. On the other hand, the Nasdaq Composite benchmark index closed at +0.85%, reaching a new historical high thanks to the increases in shares of technology companies. On the other hand, the Dow Jones Industrial Average ended -0.10%, affected mainly by the fall of General Electric at -1.80%. In news on commodities, the price of gold futures reached its highest close in a month. On the other hand, the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet on June 22 in Vienna to discuss the oil production reduction agreement, which has been a success in its 18 months of effort to reduce production and increase the price of the oil.

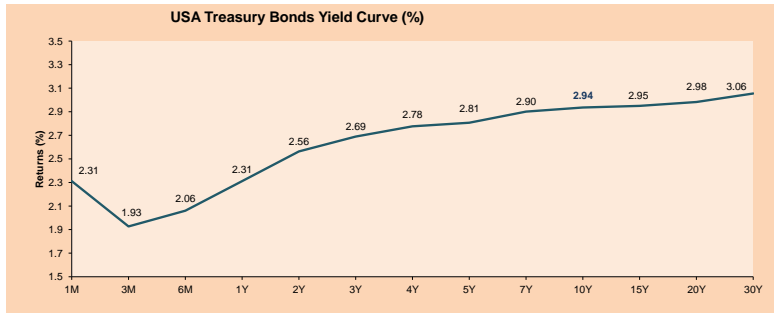

Europe:

The European market closed the session with upward yields among its main indexes after the announcement of the European Central Bank to delay the increase in interest rates at least until the summer of 2019; as well as putting an end to its stimulus program, the massive purchase of bonds, for December of this year. Additionally, the announcement caused the largest daily fall of the euro in the last 8 months, reaching 5 1.1648, at the end of the session the spot value remained down. Additionally, the ECB cut the expected growth rate for the Eurozone from 2.4% to 2.1%. The day began with losses, but these were reversed with the announcement of the ECB, with the exception of the materials sector of the European index of basic resources SXRP that remained on the downside due to the fall in copper prices due to concerns about the slowdown of China's growth, the largest copper buyer. The Euro Stoxx50 closed with +1.37%, in the United Kingdom the FTSE100 closed at +0.81%, while in Germany the DAX closed at +1.68%. Finally, the negotiations on the Brexit move forward slowly, putting on the table the possibility that the exit of the United Kingdom from the European Union will happen after March 2019, the date originally planned.

Asia:

The Asian stock market closed the session with negative results after the US Federal Reserve decided to increase the interest rate twice this year, as well as the lower expectation of Chinese economic data. The Hang Seng HSI index fell -0.93%, the Shanghai index fell -0.18%, and the Shenzhen -0.55%. Respect to the May's Chinese economic data, it highlighted the fall in industrial production, retail sales, as well as the effect caused by the impending US tariffs on Chinese products. On the other hand, China's financial stocks rose as the Bank of China did not raise interest rates after the decision of the Federal Reserve, raising the prospects of a cut in reserve requirements soon. Regarding the Japanese market, the NIK index fell -0.99% although Toshiba showed a positive return of + 2.67%; Meanwhile, South Korea's shares lagged after Wednesday's free day of negotiation for local elections, with the SEU down -1.84% and companies such as Hyundai Engineering (-8.62%) and industrial manufacturer Busan (-16.83%) continue to fall after the Trump-Kim meeting.
