Global Overview:

United States:

The United States market ended Monday's session with positive results among its main indices. After the weekend of massive purchases for Black Friday and Cyber Monday, retail companies like Amazon (+5.28%) were strongly benefited and allowed the indexes to recover from the previous week's sump, considered the worst week of Thanksgiving since 2011. In this way the Dow Jones cilmbed 354 points to reach +1.46% while the SPX and the Nasdaq of at +1.55% and +2.06%, respectively, internet sales increased by 26.4% compared to the previous year, covering the 9% drop in store traffic. Another determinant of yields was the rise in the price of oil, which reached the highest daily rise in the last 8 weeks, so that it reached 55.163 per barrel. Finally, the yield rates on JO-year Treasury screaded 30.70%, on the eve of the new FED press release on Wednesday, where it is expected to know if the rising trend of interest rates continues despite the criticism for its slowing effect on the economy.

Europe:

The European market closed with positive returns among its main indexes amid a rebound in oil prices and the approval of the contract at the weekend between the United Kingdom and the European Union. The DAX ended at +1.45%, which highlights that German business confidence fell for the third consecutive month to 102.0, in addition to the German economy would grow 0.3% in the fourth quarter compared to 0.2% in the previous quarter. The FTSE 100 rose +1.20% after the EU leaders accepted the terms of the Breat, however, they are waiting for the agreement in the British parliament against the opposition of Theresa May, Given the best scenario, it will focus on the new commercial and security relations with the EU after its departure. On the other hand, the pound appreciated, traded at $1.2855 compared to Friday ($1.2793); while the euror depreciated, trading at $1.1737 compared to $1.1339 on Friday. The FTSE Milo Increased by 2.77%, where the Italian government could reduce the goal of the budget deficit to 2% to avoid disciplinary actions, after the meeting of the leaders of the Liga de la Derecha and the 5-Star Movement.

Asia:

The Asian stock market finished the session with mixed results among its main indices. Asia Dow (+0.40%), Nikkei 225 (+0.76%) and Hang Seng (+1.73%) closed higher, however, the Shanghai index (-0.14%) could not close in positive territory. This Asian market momentum was due to the average increase in US stocks at the beginning of the session. In the Japanese case, they started to rise after the holiday weekend, among the best performers stand out the domestic demand as the beverage manufacturer Kirin (+1.47%), the FamilyMart retailer (+6.66%) and the retailer of Nition furniture (+2.31%), however, shares of the financial and energy sector fell after the drops in the price of oil at the weekend. Some of these companies include the oil explorer inpax (-2.44%) and Mitsubishi (-1.04%). In the case of Hong Kong shares, they showed greater strength despite Friday's sales. The Hang Seng index was driven by companies in the financial and property sectors. On the other, after four consecutive days of losses, the benchmark index of Taiwan jump +1.01% thanks to a better performance of the heavyweights of the technology sector such as Taiwan Semiconductor (+2.06%) and Largan Precision (+4.23%).
